The History of Wine

Wine has an archeological record dating back more than 7.5 thousand years. The earliest suspected wine residue comes from the early to mid-fifth millennium BC in the northern Zagros Mountains of Iran.

Records include ceramic jars from the Neolithic sites at Shulaveri, of present day Georgia (ABOUT 6000 BC). Exactly where wine was first made is still unclear.

It could have been anywhere in the vast region stretching from North Africa to Central South Asia where wild grapes are grown. However, the first large scale production of wine must have been in the region where grapes were first domesticated, southern Caucasus and the near east.

Bordeaux is the world's largest and arguably the world's greatest wine region.

Bordeaux gives its name to a wine region which includes the vineyards of the Gironde department and produces more top-quality wine than any other French wine region and produces more of the world's most expensive and sought-after wines than anywhere else.
